

Pheasant Club Promotes Positive Outlook

by Taylor Voegele, senior editor

In the weeks following the Rachel's Challenge presentation, three seniors have initiated a new club for students in grades 7-12 at RHS. The Pheasant Club was started by John Noyes, Jake Baloun, and Duncan Schwartz to promote a fun, inclusive atmosphere in the school that promotes school spirit. These young men decided to put their heads together to create a club representing positive school spirit.

Seniors Duncan Schwartz, John Noyes, and Jake Baloun talk about school issues at the Rachel's Challenge Program held at the High School Gymnasium last fall. This presentation led to the idea of having a Pheasant Club to help promote the spirit of Rachel's Challenge.

This club isn't just for a select group of students in high school; in fact, it is open up to anyone in junior high and high school who want to make a positive difference in the school and community.

The Pheasant Club wants to help make the decisions on what the dress up days are for the upcoming games, and other activities will be planned that will allow groups of people with different interests to mingle and get to know each other more.

According to Duncan Schwartz, "Our school doesn't have a bullying problem, we have an inclusion problem." One of the main goals of the club is to try to get as many students included to help establish a positive school climate.
